What is my topic about?

Amelia Earhart's obsession with flying could never be stopped. Throughout her career, she was the first aviator to fly solo across the Pacific Ocean. When she saw her first plane as a little child she knew flying was her thing. She bought her own plane then made the world record of the highest height of flying a plane. As she almost finished her flight around the world, her and her partner Paul Mantz disappeared towards the end.

Where did I find most of my research?

I found most of my research from my primary sources. The sources that I found really help because they give a lot of information about my topic. Also, the source that I found for the pictures of my topic is really good because there are many pictures so I have enough from my project and the source is Library of Congress. My other source is the History.com, this gives me a lot of information and tells everything of what Amelia Earhart did. My third most useful source is Newspapers.com because even though it has very little information it gives good information like the stuff Amelia did in her lifetime, like her making the world record.

What was the hardest part of my research?

I think the hardest part of my research so far is the point of view google drawing that we had to do. I think it was the hardest to me because it was hard to find people that were important to her and what they were and thought of her. It was also hard because it didn't show many people up cause if I searched who was important to her it came up as why she was important. I think the best place to find research were the cities which had the most research of her. And it also helped a little because of the little google boxes google gives for information about what you search, cause they gave me some good information about my topic too. The sites that also are made just for my topic is best too. Cause I found a website the was made just for information about my topic which I think helped and plus there is a lot of information about my topic.

How does my topic relate to Triumph and Tragedy?

I learned that Amelia Earhart was the first person to pilot over the Atlantic Ocean. She moved to be with her family and ended up flying herself. She ended up disappearing while flying over the Pacific Ocean and during her disappearance she passed away. Amelia sees her first airshow during college. She knew she had to fly after she got about two to three hundred feet off the ground. She thought flying lessons were the thing for her. Two or three years later Amelia's sister was born (Muriel). Amelia was the most famous aviator in American history.
